CALM RESTORED AS DOUMERGUE GETS TO PARIS; RIOTS CEASE

Organizing Stable Government to Save the Republic

ACCEPTS PREMIERSHIP

70-Year-Old Former President Hailed by Cheering Crowd

PARIS, France, Feb. 8.—Calm was restored to Paris today following the arrival in the Capital of former Premier Gaston Doumergue, who formally accepted the Premiership and set about the task of organizing a stable government to save the Republic. Crowds were in the streets but up to 3 o'clock this afternoon there had been no renewal of rioting which subsided at 2 a. m. after several had been killed in last night's clashes.

Doumergue conferred with Marshal Lyautey, popular world war leader, indicating he plans a cabinet of leading personalities. He is reported to have demanded a political truce for one year.

By William Parker

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
PARIS, Feb. 8.—(INS)—Gaston Doumergue, 70-year-old former president, today accepted the Premiership of France in a conference with President Albert Lebrun at the Elysee Palace, while a cheering crowd of thousands outside hailed him as the "Savior of the Republic."

Intent on forming a national union (coalition) government as the only possible means of saving France in her present bloody crisis, Doumergue discussed his task with the President for only 25 minutes.

The immense popularity of the "man with the smile" was shown as soon as he arrived by express train which had brought him from his home in southern France. With shouts of "Vive La France!", great crowds hailed the veteran statesman's re-entry into public life. Doumergue's famous smile was even wider than usual as he acknowledged the roaring crowd. His eager welcome could hardly allow his motor car to pass through the streets as he was driven across the same to the Rue Rivoli Hotel, where he established headquarters.

At the conclusion of his conference with President Lebrun, the latter issued the following brief, but happy report: "The President of the Republic has received M. Gaston Doumergue this morning and he confirmed to the President that he had accepted the mission of forming a new cabinet."

Tumultuous cheers greeted the announcement. A government of strong men of dictatorial aspect if necessary was contemplated, but the great mass of the French public appeared to be in favor of it, supporting it as they did a similar government under Premier Poincare in 1926.

Awarded Medal For Saving A Man's Life

A National Safety Council President's medal and certificate were presented at the Employees' Association meeting of the Philadelphia Electric Company at the Broadwood Hotel, Philadelphia, last night to Charles J. McShane, a company employee, for life-saving.

McShane restored to consciousness, apparently after death had occurred, James Dempsey, of near Conshohocken, who was rescued from the Schuylkill River. He used the prone pressure method, in which employees of the company are trained, and produced breath after fifteen minutes' manipulation.

The incident occurred last August 24, as a man was crossing the bridge between West Conshohocken and Conshohocken when he saw Dempsey brought from the river. His rescuers were slapping his back, a fruitless procedure, when McShane reached him and began proper restorative action.

The award was presented by H. B. Bryans, vice-president in charge of operations.

Bronze plaques awarded annually to divisions of the company which have the lowest number of lost time accidents, were presented to the following divisions for their 1933 record by Mr. Bryans: Schuylkill Station, Delaware District, Underground Section, Drafting and Construction Section, Susquehanna Section, Coke Ovens, and Germantown Section.

Honor certificates were awarded to the following divisions for having gone throughout the year without a lost time accident: Schuylkill, Richmond, Delaware and Conowingo generating stations, Delaware, Northern District and General District and Southern District substations, Susquehanna Division, Coke Ovens, Chester Group-Gas Plants, Coke Sales, Norris-town group-Gas Plants and Germantown District Office.

Merit certificates were given to the following for having accomplished a reduction of fifty per cent. or more in lost time accidents: Building Management, Eastern Division, North Philadelphia District Office and Meter Division.

ORDER, GOLDEN SCEPTRE HAS 50 MEMBERS NOW

Court Croydon, No. 24, Was Organized On March 4th, 1924

MAY SOON ERECT HOME

A large charter membership was the pride of Court Croydon, No. 24, Order of the Golden Sceptre, when that court was organized on March 4, 1924. From its membership of 49 it increased by leaps and bounds to a total of 188. This was the number reached in pre-depression times; but the number was gradually lessened by removals and because of the distress of the times.

During the 10 years of its existence Court Croydon has lost two members by death, namely Mrs. Anna A. Lewis and Mrs. Richard Gosline. The membership today is 50, and Court Croydon expects to admit 10 additional members in the near future. Members reside in Croydon, Eddington and Philadelphia. There are two honor members of this organization, they having joined after becoming 50 years of age.

Mrs. Elmer Sotting is now the worthy ruler; with Mrs. George Sotting as recorder; Miss Florence Conn as custodian; and Miss Marie Fisher as treasurer. The latter has served as treasurer for the past seven years, being the oldest officer of the organization in point of service.

The dream of Court No. 24 is soon to be realized, it is believed—that of erecting its own home. A fund set aside for that purpose has been added to, and it is expected that plans will soon be drawn for the structure.

Court Croydon was organized in 1924 through the efforts of Mrs. Elizabeth Blood, who at that time made her home in Eddington. Mrs. Blood now resides in Florida. She was a member of Court Peace, No. 18, of Philadelphia.

Members meet twice monthly, on the first and third Tuesday evenings, gathering at the residence of George Sotting, State Road and Logan avenue, for sessions. The attendance at each meeting is good.

Court Croydon sends delegates annually to the district convention, which comprises orders in New Jersey, New York, Connecticut, Delaware and Pennsylvania. Many members also attend the banquet of the order each year in Philadelphia. This event occurs on the last Saturday evening of January.

Miss Dorothy Whitmore, West Philadelphia, was a guest for several days of Mr. and Mrs. Harry White, 272 Harrison street.

Four Mad Marx Brothers Here in Film "Duck Soup"

The four mad Marx Brothers, in "Duck Soup" will be shown at the Grand Theatre for two nights starting tonight.

No one knows what to expect from this quartet of maniacs. They are the wildest, most foolish and nonsensical comedians yet discovered; and in "Duck Soup" they are at their best. It is just one round of laughter from the start of the picture until the final scene. There is no let-up, and to see Groucho and Chico try to outdo Harpo and Beppo is just a fast, furious series of the most outlandish situations and upshots of laughter ever seen in any comedy.

To drive all care and worry from a person's mind, all that is required is to see and hear this nutty bunch of fanatics.

Souderton Borough Asks County To Pay $800 Claim

Bucks County is to be asked to pay the borough of Souderton the sum of $800 for land taken in the relocation of the Bethlehem Pike.

Souderton Borough solicitor is to confer with the Bucks County Commissioners in an effort to have the claim paid by Bucks County.

The damage, Souderton Council claims, is the result of changes made in the construction of the new Bethlehem Pike through the vicinity. At one point the road follows the county line for a short distance and then cuts across a seven-acre tract of ground that is owned by the Souderton borough and which is part of the catch-basin of the Souderton water works.

Souderton had intended to reforest the tract until the State took it for the purpose of reconstruction of the Bethlehem Pike. The Souderton borough the driveway to it has been cut off, also owns a property on the tract and

LEONARD HOME AT EMILIE IS GUTTED BY NIGHT BLAZE

Investigation Made When Marauders Were Believed In the Place

FIREMEN CALLED TWICE

Ruins Still Smouldering This Morning; Much Furniture Destroyed

Believing that marauders were in her home, Mrs. Howard Leonard, of Emilie, sought aid of neighbors last evening after seeing lights through the windows as she was visiting at the home of her son. An investigation by Mrs. Leonard and three men who reside nearby, who hurried to the Leonard residence in an automobile, showed that the farm-house was afire.

The origin of the fire has not been determined, but the blaze was raging in the frame end of the frame and stone structure when the investigating party arrived. In the frame section, where the kitchen is located, the Leonard had kept a coal fire in a range.

The discovery was made at 8:30, and firemen from the several companies who responded to an alarm, were greatly hampered by the cold. The blaze was finally brought under control, and the firemen left the scene. At ten o'clock, however, fire again broke out from under some of the floor-boards, and the companies were recalled to the scene. Mr. Leonard remained at the place throughout the night so that help might quickly be summoned if the blaze should again start. Other members of the family were accommodated at the home of Mr. Leonard's son, LeRoy, a short distance from where the fire occurred.

The ruins were still smouldering this morning. The frame section of the house was entirely destroyed, and the stone portion was gutted. Much furniture was lost, and other pieces were damaged by smoke and water.

When the lights were first noticed in the Leonard home, Mrs. Leonard was accompanied to the scene by Messrs. John Morrell, Warren Bruce and Elwood Dawson. As they neared the residence they found that the raging flames were the cause of the lights which showed through the windows. Loss on the building and contents is placed at about $2,000.

Bristol Consolidated firemen responded to the call and was at the scene for many hours. Water had to be obtained from a great distance and the firemen coupled the hose of the various companies together, so as to fight the flames. Chief McGee was in charge of the Bristol firemen.

THE SEARCH FOR OIL
With oil, the world's present problem is not finding ways and means to get along with an inadequate supply. That is the problem for the distant future. The task at hand is one having to do with elimination of waste, prevention of overproduction, and conservation of the untapped reservoirs.

For many years men have tumbled over one another in their haste to discover, and to drain, the world's oil reservoirs. It mattered not whether there was immediate demand for the output. When production exceeded consumption huge tanks were built in which superfluous petroleum could be stored and the cost of building and maintaining these artificial reservoirs was added to the cost of oil.

Lately a new policy has been gaining ground. Why not permit the oil to remain underground secure in its natural reservoirs until such time as demand makes necessary its removal?

Though drilling and pumping should not be extended until consumption catches up with production, the world-wide search for new oil-bearing lands should not stop. That the search will go on is evidenced by the application of oil operators for the assignment of five short wave channels to them so that they can use the radio in their research and exploration.

Despite the fact that the supply of oil seems to be inexhaustible, there is constant need for the discovery of new sources of supply, and if the radio is essential to the work of locating and charting those sources the request of the operators should be granted at least in part.

CREDIT BUYING SOUND

During that period of credit inflation from 1921 to 1929 a prediction often heard was that the first major business slump would wreck the installment part of the retail credit structure. That slump has been with us nearly five years and the part of the credit structure which was to collapse first has not even trembled.

Department of commerce statistics prove that installment buying today is in the same ratio to cash sales as during the prosperity era and that credit losses in this field have been surprisingly small compared with other credit losses.

Here is another instance of misplaced confidence. Although the least was expected of him, the private citizen has shown a better understanding of his credit limitations and possibilities than have most of the big corporations and financiers and many financial institutions. The wage-earner has handled his credit better than the railroad managers.

Installment houses are, it is true, carrying along many accounts of the unemployed, but this money is not lost. And it speaks well for their financial strength and management that the depression has not bogged them with frozen assets.

Business is better today for the fact that credit merchandising came through its first great test with flying colors.

Kidnappers aren't without conscience. They don't call the deferred ransom payments "easy."

Now will Cuba recognize us by remaining on its good behavior for a reasonable spell?

SYNOPSIS

Lovely Stanley Paige could have married any eligible man in her set—there was, for instance, the young lawyer, Perry Develtest, loyal and reliable; but she fell in love with dashing, irresponsible Drew Armitage. Drew told Dennis St. John, his former sweetheart, that although he would have loved Stanley under any circumstances, he would never have become engaged to her had she been poor. Then comes the crash and Stanley's fortune is wiped out. She does not care as long as she has Drew's love, but he says it would be madness to marry on his income. So with a dramatic "Stanley, I shall never forget you and I shall always regret having hurt you—but never having loved you!" he passes out of her life. Though broken-hearted, Stanley accepts the blow stoically. She refuses to accept charity from her friends, leaves her luxurious apartment and rents a cheap furnished room.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

Stanley followed the woman up three flights of dusty, carpeted stairs. They smelled of disinfectant and a certain mustiness that comes of too little sunlight and fresh air. At the top of the last flight, Mrs. Foley paused for breath. "Next year, I'm giving up this place for one farther uptown. I'll have just one floor in an apartment house with elevator service. I can't stand these stairs the way I used to. Besides, I can't get much for these rooms any more—what with so many better places going up all around me."

She unlocked the door of a small room at the end of the hall. It had sloping side walls, a dormer window, a studio bed, a painted bureau. The floor was painted a dull green and it had one colorless but clean rag rug. On a rod by the dresser, one cotton and one Turkish towel hung limply in the heat. The place was unbearably hot.

"There's no closet but you can hang your clothes behind that curtain. Most folks that has this room don't need a closet. The bathroom's the third door down the hall—please don't leave the light burning."

She waited silently while Stanley pulled off her gloves and her close little hat. Then she cleared her throat and said abruptly, but not unkindly, "I'll have to trouble you for the first week in advance, please—it's customary."

"I'm sorry," Stanley flushed swiftly. "I've never taken a room before—I didn't know."

"Oh, that's all right." For the first time the woman smiled. It was rather a bleak smile. One felt that it was not at home on her tight, lean lips. "I've had all kinds since I started here fifteen years ago—you're not the first young lady that's been with me. It's a strange world—and a hard one." She laid two keys on the dresser, turned and went back downstairs, making scarcely a sound on her worn, rubber heels.

Stanley pushed open the window and sat down on the bed. Her head was aching, her mouth was dry. She could no longer think. She had thought so much in the last week, such a cruel, ever-recurring circle of thoughts, like a needle going around and around on a monotonous silence, silly, jumbled record: "Drew has left you—you're poor, desperately poor—you ought to hate him—but you love him—you haven't any pride—you haven't any money—you're just a poor, weak thing—crawling away—you can't face people—Drew has left you—" Over and over again, tormenting her, making her crazy, hysterical, beneath the smooth, hard shell of her apparent calmness.

But now she seemed to have reached an end to thinking. But she could still feel. She knew that she was miserably uncomfortable. Her eyes strayed to the two towels hanging so dejectedly on their metal rod—a bath, surely, a bath would help.

She pulled herself to her feet, took the towels and went down the hall.

The bathroom door stood partly open and before the marble wash-basin a girl in scarlet pajamas was cleaning her teeth. She stared at Stanley quite frankly out of thickly lashed, blue eyes. "I'll be out of here in a sec—you're new, aren't you?"

Stanley nodded, smiled politely. She wondered if this was the girl who had lived in the "swell dump on the Drive." She thought that quite likely she was—she was little and neatly put together and her hair was very blond and her eyes were very wise.

"What room have you got—the one at the end of the hall?"

"Yes." "Well, you'll suffocate in that closet. I know, I lived in it last summer. You'd better drag your bed into my room if it stays so damned hot. I'm in luck—I've got two windows. They're not on the court, either. Sometimes, just for excitement, a breeze gets fresh and pops in on me." She gathered up her soap and toothbrush and a couple of damp towels. "You're in luck, too. I've left the tub clean and some hot water; that's more than some of the rest of 'em would have done." She grinned again, flung back her short golden hair and went past Stanley down the hall, leaving behind her an aroma of bath powder and violet soap.

"Whoever she is," Stanley thought, turning on the hot water, watching the thin stream trickle into the bottom of the narrow tub, "she's friendly and awfully pretty."

Her head ached with fatigue. She wondered if the tub would ever fill. If she would have energy enough to climb into it, if it did. If having climbed in, it would not be easier to lie quite still and let the water rise slowly but surely until it merged her. She had read about it once, in a tabloid, a girl who had drowned herself in a bathtub. Then it had seemed a silly, stupid sort of a thing to do. Now it seemed so easy, so simple, so altogether possible.

The water reached the nickel outlet and began to gurgle out. Stanley reached down and turned it off. Stepped over the side of the tub and slid into the water's warm embrace. It touched the back of her neck, caressed her chin. She closed her eyes. Relaxed. The pain left her head. The whirling receded from before her eyes. Her body felt deliciously light and buoyant. She lifted one arm and felt the pull of the water against it. Turned over on her side and watched it trickle over her toes.

She closed her eyes and sank her face against its warm surface. For a long moment she held her breath like a person swimming under water, then she raised her head, brushed the water out of her eyes, with the back of her arm. That girl had been insane—people didn't drown themselves in bathtubs.

She reached for a jar of bath salts. Shook some gently into the tub. They were green and sparkling and smelled of pine woods; they were delightfully fragrant and reassuringly familiar.

Stanley had flung herself on the bed, not bothering to dress again. Heat streamed in almost visible waves through the open window and across the narrow room.

Sounds came in through the window also, borrowed like the heat from the street below: the shriek of children, the screech of too hastily applied brakes, the rumble of surface cars and the shrill hawking of an occasional newsboy. Friendly sounds, impersonal sounds. Like the heat, they beat against her. There was no escaping either.

The blond girl came and knocked on the door, pushed it open.

"Going out to dinner?"

Stanley shook her head. "It's so hot—"

"I know but it's bad business going without food. There's a tea room around the corner—it's not half bad. We can have an erabment salad and some iced coffee. I'll wait while you dress."

Stanley put on her clothes obediently. It was too much trouble to protest. The girl sat on the window-sill and smoked a cigarette and watched her with frankly curious eyes. "What's your line?" she asked, staring a bit at a French chemise Stanley was sliding over her head. "Model?"

"No—I'm afraid I haven't any yet. I've got to find something to do."

"My gosh, but you're optimistic! What did you do last? Stanley managed a small smile. "Nothing," she admitted honestly. "You see, I've always had plenty of money—but now quite suddenly I haven't any."

The blond girl nodded, her eyes a bit wide. "So that's it. I thought your clothes were different—and your voice. Gosh, all this must seem awful to you." She indicated the narrow room, the shabby furniture.

"Not so awful as other things that have happened to me," Stanley assured her quietly. "You haven't told me your name," she added. "mine's Stanley Paige."

"Haven't I seen you in the rotary section of the Sunday paper? With a dark, awfully good-looking man?"

"I expect so." "Imagine me knowing anyone like that!" She was quite evidently impressed. "I'm Valerie Blair. Just a salesgirl at present in a little shop on Fifty-eighth—but I've got ambitions. I'm going to be assistant buyer before I'm thirty. After that—"

"She shrugged. "Our buyer makes ten thousand a year, to say nothing about trips to Paris and all the rest of it. That's what I'm working for—I'm out for blood." She grinned swiftly, flinging her cigarette out the window. "I don't suppose it sounds much to you—but, baby, it's heaven to me!"

SHORT CUTS TO THE DINNER TABLE

By Vera A. Schneider

Dan Cupid will be in town again shortly and I wonder how accurate he will be with his bow and arrow? I've had a number of letters asking for party suggestions—suggestions not only as pertaining to food, but color schemes for table decorations and the like. Of course, St. Valentine's Day always suggests red, but I like to dissent from this custom. I think there is nothing prettier or daintier than a pink and blue combination. We can arrange our table with a lace cover, or individual luncheon covers, but I rather lean to a handsome white damask cloth over which is sprinkled small pink hearts of varying sizes. These can be made very easily with pink cardboard at practically no expense. Then for a centerpiece, what could be prettier than a graceful bouquet of pink roses—small ones—and blue delphinium with which is intermingled a few graceful sprays of baby breath! If the table is a round one, it might be well to have a set of candelabras containing three candles each and placed on either side of the centerpiece. Or, if we have an oblong table and plan a large party, we could have a larger bouquet in the center with smaller ones at either end and the candles between the bouquets. The place cards, too, can be made from pink and blue cardboard—at comparatively little cost. And, all in all, we can entertain our friends in a very gracious and yet inexpensive manner, if we will but put forth a little effort on our own part.

As for the refreshments, these too, can be gotten together so as not to play havoc with the budget, and I'll suggest a menu or two that may be helpful to you in your party planning.

DON'T GET UP NIGHTS

Lax the Bladder With Juniper Oil, Buchu, Etc.

Drive out the impurities and excess acids that cause irritation, burning and frequent desire. Juniper oil is pleasant to take in the form of BUKETS, the bladder laxative, also containing Buchu leaves, etc. Works on the bladder similar to castor oil on the bowels. Get a 25c box from any drug store. After four days if not relieved of "getting up nights" go back and get your money. If you are bothered with backache or leg pains caused from bladder disorders you are bound to feel better after this cleansing and you get your regular sleep. PLENTY OF ACTION IS
PROMISED FOR TONIGHT

Action, and plenty of it, is promised to the fans of the Bristol Basketball League tonight on the Italian Mutual Aid floor where the St. Ann's A. C. quintet meets the Third Ward A. C. and the Paterson Parchment Paper Company plays the Knights of Columbus.

The losers of the St. Ann's-Warders game will be eliminated from the second half race. The teams are deadlocked for third place with two victories and two defeats each. The Knights of Columbus five is also tied with the Saints and Pikers and will stand a mathematical chance of finishing in a deadlock for first place if the team can take over the Paterson boys.

The Pikers will use their strongest line-up in an effort to take over the Purple and Gold. Johnny Carroll will jump center, with "Butch" DeBoeskey and "Henny" Morgan as forwards. The guards will be "Ney" McGinley and Gene Lawler, with "Jimmy" Massilla alternating.

The Saints will use the same five that easily took over the Knights of Columbus last week. Bud Tullio will be at center, while Pleo and Pandetta will be at the shooting posts. The men in the defense positions will be Borne and Russo.

Regaining their momentum after a defeat at the hands of the Hawks, the Paterson Parchment Paper Company has won its last two matches and will be after its third straight tilt. Manager Parella will use his same five players who have captured all the victories, namely: Rogers, Kovalich, J. Frankovic, F. Frankovic, and Hines.

The Knights suffered a crushing defeat in their last fray and are out after revenge at the Paper Millers' expense. The line-up which Craven will start will be composed of Parker and Lake, forwards; Morrissey, center; Corrigan and Fallon, guards.

Opening tap-off is scheduled for eight o'clock sharp.

Beaver Skins Were Once
The Standard of Barter

Much interest has been manifest in the beavers which have located on Queen Anne's Creek, Emile, and the following paragraphs which appeared in a recent issue of "The Target" will give information concerning the rodents to the Courier readers:

At the close of the eighteenth century, when this nation was a struggling republic, beaver skins were the standard of exchange and barter.

As early as 1669 a group of Englishmen formed the Hudson's Bay Company and their trading posts were scattered throughout Canada and Alaska. Even to this day the Hudson's Bay Company operates stores in Canada.

The fortune of the Astor family had its beginning in these trading posts. John Astor came to America from Germany at the age of twenty. On the voyage he became acquainted with a fur trader on whose advice he devoted himself to the same business. Agents employed by Astor ventured as far west as the Columbia River, where they established the settlement called Astoria. It was intended by Astor as a central depot for his trading, but the following year, in 1812, it was taken and occupied by the English.

Beaver skins were in great demand in Europe, and every river and lake in Canada and the country south to the Gulf of Mexico had its trading posts. By horseback, mule train, canoe and barge, trappers and fur traders went in search of beaver skins. They hunted up and down the Mississippi and its tributaries, the forests of Canada and the Rocky Mountains. The Indians sold pelts to the traders and the traders shipped the skins to England and France.

Beavers were plentiful in the unexplored regions of North America. Great numbers of hunters set out into the interior with the hope of making a fortune in beaver skins, but many a lonely trapper lost his life by the feathered arrow of an Indian brave because he had penetrated Indian hunting grounds.

Trading posts fixed a value on a beaver pelt and all other commodities were bought and sold on this standard. A pound of tobacco was paid for with a beaver skin; a rifle cost ten skins, and a pound of powder cost two skins. Blankets were graded according to weight and were marked by stripes woven in the corner. In the Northlands blankets still bear these stripes.

When, after a period of years, the trappers had penetrated all sections of the country of North America, beavers became so scarce that it was hardly worth the effort to trap for them. Then the country went off the beaver standard.

For a few short years on the western plains the hide of the buffalo became the standard of exchange. But the buffalo was such an easy beast to kill that it was not long before it vanished from the plains.

For fifty years there were no beavers to be found except in a few parks and other refuges. Today there are beaver colonies in the streams of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, and other Northern states. Many of the states prohibit the trapping and hunting of the little animals. Some allow a short open season during December. A fur buyer will not purchase a beaver skin unless it bears a game warden's seal showing that it was taken legally.

TWO KILLED WHILE COASTING

Easton, Feb. 8—The worst coasting accident in this city in many years

today had taken the lives of two boys, George Thomas Russell, 10, and Joseph Busceni, 8. The boys were killed instantly last night when their sled was smashed to pieces in a collision with an automobile driven by Charles R. Hoffman, 17, Easton. The accident happened as the boys' sled shot across a busy intersection at the base of a steep grade. At the time of the crash Hoffman was driving Hiller Kahn, 17, who had been injured while ice skating, to a physician's office. Hoffman was released but must appear at a Coroner's hearing.
